Is your organization facing technical challenges as you shift to remote work due to COVID-19? Do you have a wealth of data but are unsure how to best leverage it to advance your organization's mission? Is your website in need of an upgrade?

MIT's PKG Center for Public Service is looking for partners like you for virtual social impact internships for Summer 2020 and beyond.

PKG's Social Impact Employment Program connects MIT undergraduate students with paid internships for challenging opportunities that yield significant impact for your organization and community. These opportunities build students' skills and support career exploration while working to address social or environmental change. To ensure a broad range of organizations can participate, the PKG Center will partially (and in some cases fully) fund internship positions.

Eligible Partners Include:

- Nonprofit organizations
- Public and government agencies
- Social enterprises
- Foundations
- Corporate social responsibility departments

"[Our intern] has now become an indispensable member on our team contributing his knowledge and confidence in setting up servers, platforms with which we are unfamiliar, as well as offering an unusual and gifted mixture of patience, clear communication in plain language and python programming skills."

-MIT Intern Supervisor

Benefits of Hosting an MIT Intern:

- + Access MIT students with specialized technical skills at a low-cost or in some cases, no cost
- + Build your organization's capacity
- + Make an impact on an emerging young professional and demonstrate the importance of your mission through mentoring
- + Receive ongoing support from PKG staff including assisting with crafting the position, recruiting students, and advising and troubleshooting
- + Build relationships with students and staff and promote your organization and engagement opportunities
- + Expand your network and your organization's reach through special MIT-hosted partner events

Potential Internship Projects:

- Build or upgrade websites or apps
- Validate, clean, analyze, and visualize data sets
- Develop and manage digital content
- Teach robotics or coding
- Conduct research, and create surveys and reports
- Assist in product development and testing
- Assess market potential for program growth, determine performance reporting measures, and develop strategies to drive improvements

Recent Social Impact Interns Have:

- Coordinated the sales, marketing, and digital platform verticals for a community shared solar power organization
- Produced and published electronic materials for an organization working to increase access to legal information using code
- Developed a scoring model to prioritize drug-cancer pairs from clinical trials

Ready to Get Started?

We currently have a pipeline of students seeking summer opportunities with organizations like yours and we are eager to connect, discuss your project, and answer your questions. Contact Julie Uva, Program Administrator, at juva@mit.edu if you're interested in partnering on an internship now or in the future.

The PKG Center taps and expands MIT students' unique skills and interests to prepare them to explore and address complex social and environmental challenges. We educate students to collaborate ethically and effectively with community partners to engage in meaningful public service, today and in their lives beyond MIT.
